Asia-Pacific Homeland Security Summit 2004

NOVEMBER 14th - 17th HILTON HAWAIIAN VILLAGE HONOLULU, HAWAII

The Summit is designed for U.S. and foreign executives with an interest in national and regional security issues. By bringing together government and business leaders of the Asia Pacific region, the presentations will stimulate new ideas and innovative approaches in support of anti-terrorism strategies.

The Summit is comprised of general sessions, in-depth track sessions and an exhibit hall. General sessions will consist of keynote addresses, question and answer sessions, and panel discussions. Track sessions will consist of panel presentations and in-depth addresses by industry experts, government policymakers and private-sector executives. These sessions will emphasize interactivity between speakers and attendees. The exhibit hall will feature interesting demonstrations and information by industry experts.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE

LINDA LINGLE
Governor State of Hawaii

Aloha!
The State of Hawai'i was proud to host the Inaugural Asia-Pacific Homeland Security Summit & Exposition in November 2003. With the strong foundation built last year, we look forward to hosting the second annual summit from November 14-17, 2004.

At our Inaugural Summit, more than 600 delegates from 19 nations, economies and U.S. Territories gathered in the Aloha State to discuss big-picture views about how the world is responding to the threat of terrorism. The delegates also shared ideas on smaller, but very practical solutions for making our local venues and communities more secure.

World events in Asia, the Middle East, and Europe demonstrate that we are fighting an elusive and ever-changing enemy. Terrorists may be small in number, but they will not stop their campaigns of death and destruction until we stop them. The Summit gathering illustrated that we can and must work together to protect our freedom and secure not just our own borders, but those of our neighbors throughout the region as well.

When U.S. and Asia-Pacific senior leaders from the private and public sectors meet again this November, we will build on our achievements in developing innovative response strategies, discuss mutually beneficial opportunities and share best practices.

We have learned much from each other, but we have much more to share in our common goal of ensuring the security of our citizens and winning the war against terrorism.

Mahalo and hope to see you soon.

TRACK 1: LEADERSHIP AND POLICY

This year's Leadership and Policy Track will focus on key issues and best practices in four critical areas: biosecurity, port security, cyber-security and tourism. Track 1's concentration will be of particular interest to U.S. and Asian political leaders; Cabinet Secretaries and Ministers of Defense, Health, Commerce and Industry, Home Affairs, Defense, Tourism and Foreign Affairs; Ambassadors, Asian and American CEOs of multinational corporations, Port Directors and Heads of NGOs.

The Track 1 experience will help develop a common level of regional awareness regarding Homeland Security (HLS) issues, protocols and preferred methods of response while exposing participants to best practices from the office of HLS. It will also enhance an awareness of cultural differences in how to manage security issues throughout Asia-Pacific Region. The ultimate goal will be to facilitate information sharing and connectivity so that governments and business can interface seamlessly and manage HLS threats in a multicultural manner. The track's agenda will address HLS implications for the public, private and NGO sectors through discussions of government and business initiatives to mitigate the threat of global terrorism and to develop corporate resiliency to today's asymmetric threats.

TRACK 2: LAW ENFORCEMENT

Track 2 focuses on Law Enforcement. The track offers an exciting array of panelists and subject matter experts from the United States, Asia, and the Pacific region. Summit delegates attending the panel sessions in this track will benefit from the law enforcement experience in counter-terrorism policy development, lessons-learned during recent National Special Security Events, and tactics that have effectively countered Al Qaeda-linked terrorist organizations in Asia such as the Abu Sayyaf Group and Jemaah Islamiyah.

Who should attend: Law enforcement officials, Homeland Security Advisors, Public Safety Practitioners, Public Health Officials, Emergency Managers, Military Personnel, Government Attorneys, and Security Managers.

TRACK 3: CURRENT ISSUES

Track 3 will address topics of current interest featuring an array of subject matter experts from government and private industry. Panel discussions will identify common problems and working solutions in communications interoperability, focus on technological developments that improve decision-making and information sharing, and address national and regional concerns in protecting agricultural resources. Track 3 will also feature a roundtable discussion among senior government and industry leaders with a focus on critical infrastructure policy development and planning.

Who should attend: Homeland Security Advisors, Agricultural and Farm Sector representatives, Communications Practitioners, Education, Science and Technology Sector representatives, Public Health Officials, Emergency Managers, Industry and Critical Infrastructure Facility Owners and Operators, and Industry Security Managers.

TRACK 4: COUNTERTERRORISM REGIONAL OUTREACH

Track 4 would initiate a Counterterrorism Regional Outreach program (CT Regional Outreach), a network of Asia Pacific security professionals cooperating on education and information activities relating to combating terrorism. Allowing access to both U.S. Pacific Command and U.S. other government assets to an outreach program would foster multinational and interagency information sharing and provide a virtual information resource center for strategic-level counter terrorist practitioners in the Global War on Terrorism (GWOT). This virtual center would provide open-source and unclassified information available to strategic and security studies institutions as well as strategic and operational level headquarters. Through collaboration, these various agencies can develop education programs for security professionals involved in combating terrorism at the appropriate levels.

A CT Regional Outreach program will provide a means to openly share perspectives and opinions in order to develop and maintain a common operating picture of terrorism and related issues among regional partners in the GWOT, offer clarification of US security policies and actions, and provide information products and education programs to directly support officially recognized interagency and multinational coordination requirements. The long-term goal of the outreach program is to: have a permanent network that would be the focal point to coordinate conferences and seminars that continuously examine education and research goals for counter terrorism; design curricula to prepare security professionals for multinational, interagency, and coalition duties related to terrorism and transnational security issues; offer specially tailored problem-solving workshops; use research and education assets to produce unclassified analysis, reports, assessments, and databases for command and staffs of operational headquarters and strategic-level agencies.

3:30 pm - 5:15 pm Concurrent Session #2

LEADERSHIP & POLICY TRACK: BIOSECURITY

Public health has become a national security issue for all countries. A bioterrorism attack or a major disease outbreak such as Avian Flu, SARS, or West Nile virus would strain a nation's healthcare system and could devastate its economy. Our highly developed systems of transportation and globally linked economies mean that any disease event can rapidly escalate to have regional or even worldwide consequences.

Meeting these challenges will require improved biosecurity preparedness (effective strategies, plans and information systems), improved public health readiness and response capabilities (e.g. deploying state-of-the-art disease surveillance systems), and well-trained healthcare professionals who will be the first responders to a bio-event. Lessons learned from recent emerging disease epidemics can prepare us to better respond to bioterrorism.

This panel includes expertise in local and national government, emergency management, national security and academia from the U.S. and Asia. The development of local and regional public health strategies to protect citizens against these health threats will be discussed.

Moderator: Bart Aronoff, MPH, Chief, Bioterrorism Preparedness & Response Branch, State of Hawaii

Speakers: Dr. Scott Lillibridge, M.D., Professor and Director, Center for Biosecurity and Public Health Preparedness, University of Texas, School of Public Health, Dr. Duane Gubler, Director, Asia-Pacific Institute of Tropical Medicine and Infectious Diseases, John A.
